

Susan Page

Susan Page is the Washington Bureau chief of USA TODAY, where she writes about the White House and national politics. She is the author of The Matriarch: Barbara Bush and the Making of an American Dynasty, a New York Times best-seller published in 2019. Her new book, a biography of Nancy Pelosi titled Madam Speaker: Nancy Pelosi and the Lessons of Power, is being published by Twelve/Hachette in April 2021.

Susan has covered eleven presidential elections and is now covering her seventh White House administration. She has interviewed the past ten presidents and reported from six continents and dozens of foreign countries. She has won every journalism award given specifically for coverage of the presidency. She also has served as president of the White House Correspondents Association and of the Gridiron Club, the oldest association of journalists in Washington. In 2020, she moderated the vice-presidential debate between Mike Pence and Kamala Harris. She frequently appears as an analyst on TV and radio.

A native of Wichita, Kansas, she received a bachelor's degree from Northwestern and a master's degree from Columbia. She and her husband, Carl Leubsdorf, have two sons, Ben and Will.
